25X1A 1. On [redacted] the Mukden Office of the Supply and Service Command of the Chinese Communist Army held a meeting of the Anti-American and Aid-Korea Volunteer Medical Service Corps, attended by 22 heads of various volunteer medical service corps from Shanghai, Nanking, Tientsin, Peiping, Central and South China, and Manchuria.

2. The meeting was led by Ho Ch'eng ( 賀 誠 ), head of the Health Department of the Supply and Service Command and concurrently deputy chief of the Mukden Office. The function of the meeting was to reallocate the service regions and duties of the various corps according to the actual situation.

3. The meeting began with an acclamation of the People's Volunteers Army Command by Ho Ch'eng. He then began reporting on conditions at the front and at home. He said that because of the continuation and expansion of the war and the increasing number of wounded, it was necessary to reallocate the service regions, personnel, and supplies of the various corps to assure timely and proper medical attention for the wounded and the sick.

4. During the meeting, the representatives of the Peiping, Tientsin, Shanghai and Manchurian Corps, which had taken up the work before the others, made reports on the experience they had gained and asked the Health Department to provide adequate medical supplies and X-ray films.

5. The meeting passed a resolution to allocate 600 physicians and medical service personnel for the front and 230 for bases in Manchuria. A system of rotation would be established so that troops at the front would be replaced by those in the rear every three weeks or one month. Volunteer medical groups in the various localities were requested to share the burden of those who had already volunteered their services. The Health Department of the Supply and Service Command assured the delegates that medical supplies would be made available promptly.

6. The meeting lasted for two days. Afterwards, the representatives were entertained at a dinner party given in the Mukden Medical College by Ho Chin-nien ( 賀 金 年 ), deputy commander of the Northeast Military Area, on behalf of the People's Volunteers Army Command. After the dinner, they were invited to a theatrical performance by the Cultural Work Corps of the Northeast Military Area.
